CityDance Early Arts' students take center court to perform during half-time at an upcoming Washington Wizard's game

Washington, DC—More than 60 students from CityDance Ensemble's D.R.E.A.M. program will take center court to perform a dance routine during half-time of the Washington Wizard's basketball game on Wednesday, March 28 at the Verizon Center. Returning for the second year by invitation from Washington Sports & Entertainment, 3rd – 6th grade students from several local elementary schools will showcase the talent they have developed throughout the year-long D.R.E.A.M. program run by CityDance Ensemble's Early Arts outreach education division.

"The D.R.E.A.M. halftime reflects Abe Pollin's [Chairman & CEO of Washington Sports & Entertainment] commitment to the DC community and our commitment to great halftime entertainment," said Judy Holland-Burton, Washington Sports & Entertainments Senior Vice President. "Our fans want to support our youngsters, and these kids, coming from Wards 7 and 8, receive very few opportunities to show what they can do. This is the second year we've brought them onto the court for a halftime show, and we're looking forward to seeing this larger group, with more kids and more schools, out there. It's special for them, and for us."

Now in its fourth year, the D.R.E.A.M. program (Dream, Research, Evaluate, Action, Motivation) transforms the lives of at-risk youth in then DC metropolitan area school through an after-school arts and community building curriculum. The program will reach more than 135 students this year through performances and classes designed to empower children to identify their dreams and gain the confidence and self-esteem to pursue them. Each program consists of a kick-off performance for the entire school by the CityDance Early Arts Performing Company, a 24-week after-school program that meets twice weekly, and a student performance bringing together children from all the D.R.E.A.M. schools.

The D.R.E.A.M. students selected to perform at the Washington Wizards game have been in rehearsal since late November in the studios at the CityDance Center at Strathmore in North Bethesda, Maryland. Leading rehearsals is local professional dancer and choreographer Aysha Upchurch who currently performs for CityDance's Early Arts Dance Company and instructs throughout the metropolitan area.

"It is an absolute joy to see these children work so hard to achieve their goals," notes Candice Webster, CityDance Director of Education. "This once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to perform at the Washington Wizards game gives these students a chance to extend their vision beyond just their classroom or community and to realize what it feels like to succeed and demonstrate their talent and achievements before a large crowd. It's truly a way to build their self-esteem and give them hope for a promising future."

During the 2006-2007 school year, the D.R.E.A.M. program is operating in eight Washington, DC elementary schools: Green and Garfield in Ward 8; C.W. Harris and Nalle in Ward 7; Maury and J.O. Wilson in Ward 6; and Brightwood and Kingsbury Day School in Ward 4. The program also operates in Charles Drew Elementary in Silver Spring, Maryland and Tucker Elementary in Alexandria, Virginia.

"Having the D.R.E.A.M. initiative at C.W. Harris for the 3rd year has captured the minds, spirit, and body of our boys and girls to focus their creative talents through movement and dance, and more importantly to focus their thinking on what they aspire to become and how they must plan in order to reach their dream," comments Shirley Ambush, Principal of C.W. Harris Elementary School. "One of the great opportunities CityDance provides our students is participation in the Wizards' half-time performance. Our students can barely contain their excitement!"
